

Less than one percent of all refugees have access to university education, while at the same time, people in crisis and war regions face elementary challenges that are a barrier to further or higher education. Yet many have the talent and the will to study.

Since 2019, the KU has been part of “JWL - Jesuit Worldwide Learning: Higher Education at the Margins“. The Learning Facilitator course has now been jointly developed as a blended learning format offering people in crisis regions a unique opportunity to continue their education.

Our offer

Since 2019, “Jesuit Worldwide Learning” has partnered with the KU to offer a special online “Learning Facilitator” course for talented young people in regions where access to higher education is limited due to war and displacement, as well as opportunities to continue their education online. Women and men from Afghanistan, Myanmar, Sri Lanka, Malawi and India can enroll in this program at the KU as students.

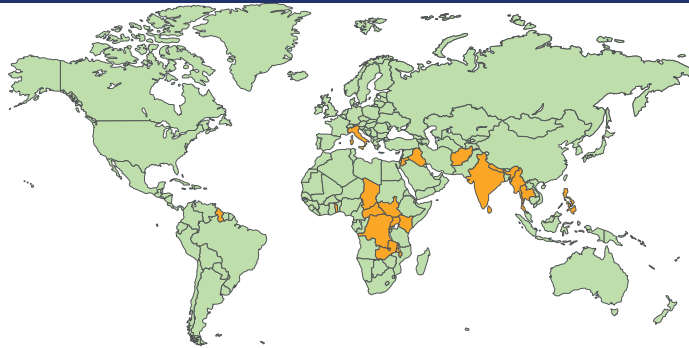

Innovative and attractive offer

Students complete a teacher training course in a combination of online lessons and personal support on-site. Project coordination is taken over by the KU Faculty of Religious Education. Students are mentored and supervised and their performance is graded remotely.

Upon successful completion of the six-month course, they receive the “Learning Facilitator” certificate from the University. They thus become educational multipliers in their environment, in turn accompanying other people in their learning process through the Jesuit Worldwide Learning program.

At a glance

Why is our project so important?

“This offer takes into account that digitalization has not only brought changes to the way we teach, but also to the way we learn. Many more students will follow, as the need for teachers is very high in many parts of the world“, explains JWL President Father Peter Balleis.

The KU and JWL want to help create innovative learning spaces for students in challenging life contexts. Specifically, this means facilitating student meetings for group work and discussion in learning centers with Internet access and creating a virtual learning environment with lecturers from Germany and the United States.

Jesuit Worldwide Learning

Through innovative educational technology solutions, JWL empowers communities that are marginalized – whether through poverty, geographical location, lack of opportunity, conflict, or forced displacement – by providing high-quality university education around the world. Currently, JWL supports over 4000 students from more than 40 countries.

HIGHER EDUCATION AT THE MARGINS

JWL aims to give hope and career prospects to young people who would otherwise not have access to universities. Education helps support people in crisis areas and reduce the causes of flight. “Regions with little education have high conflict potential“, says Father Peter Balleis. “Educating critical, solution-oriented personalities is the key to peace.”
