Moamen Ghanem is currently directing the Center of Education for Sustainable Development at Heliopolis University for Sustainable Development. Mr. Ghanem is managing various educational projects and programs as part of his duty in the ESD Center which are all focused on enhancing the quality of education. These programs are directed to the university academic staff members represented in on-the-job capacity development programs in addition to schools' teachers' capacity building, community-based learning programs, and youth engagement programs.

Mr. Ghanem gained his master's degree in ICT in Education for Sustainable Development from Frederick University, where his study focused on testing the impact of one of the authentic assessment methods on the refugees' learners' quality education.

In addition to the academic degree, he has more than 9 years of experience in the field of ESD and Sustainable Development SD which is one of the main topics he is keen to teach to Heliopolis University students for the past 7 years. Moreover, he is teaching the topic of Social Entrepreneurship for university students as a mandatory course, his role in this course is to facilitate the course content, provide mentorship to the students who must create their own business models, manage their projects, and back it with a vivid prototype.

Besides his position in Heliopolis University, Mr. Ghanem is a private consultant and instructional designer for many educational projects which address the concept of sustainability & ESD, moreover, he contributed to various educational conferences as a guest speaker.
