

Welcome to the Faculty of Languages and Literatures

The Faculty of Languages and Literatures is home to the philology departments – Classical Philology, English and American Studies, German Studies, and Romance Studies – and the departments of Art History, Classical Archaeology, and Journalism. With over 1.100 students, it is the largest faculty at the Catholic University of Eichstätt-Ingolstadt. Over 20 professors, a large number of research associates, and a team of research support staff ensure that students receive excellent supervision and support.

The common theme among the departments at the Faculty of Languages and Literatures is a focus on culture and media. Language, literature, art, public communication, and media communication are key topics in its research and teaching. The faculty trains its students to be mediators, whether as teachers, journalists, public relations specialists, or other cultural mediators in the broader sense.

The Faculty of Languages and Literatures offers the following degree programs:

- Bachelor's degree program in European Studies
- Bachelor's degree program in Journalism
- Bachelor's degree program in Latin American Studies
- Master's degree program in European Studies
- Master's degree program in InterculturAd – Intercultural Advertising (German–Finnish double degree program)
- Master's degree program in Journalism: Innovation and Management

It also runs a wide range of courses for students of the following degree programs:

- Interdisciplinary Bachelor's and Master's degree program
- LehramtPlus teaching degree programs
